Since the early 19th century and the appearance of latin sans serifs, structure and proportion were explored and combined in many ways before being solidified into canon. The immediate and lasting success of *Helvetica*¹ and *Univers*² — two visions of the Moderns' alphabet — established the contours of what have since been called Neo-grotesques.

Alphabets such as *Recta*³ or *Neuzeit-S*⁴ could then be perceived as reactions to this success while still being genuine attempts to combine a modern grotesque and a geometric roman. This represents the starting point of the Mier project. Its shape, structure, and contrast relate equally to both geometric and grotesque canons. A few key glyphs vary (J, M, a, j, t, u, 6, 9, &), forming Mier A and Mier B, in order to highlight this duality.
